INTERVIEWING A QUEEN.

The Hawk-Eye's Washington Correspondent Has a Chat with Liliuokalani.

I fancied there was a homesick tone in her voice as though her thoughts were away in the sunny island of her birth. When her secretary showed me a photograph of her Hawaiian home near Honolulu I could not but feel it can hardly be preference that keeps her away from it. A large, square, white house, embowered in trees and flowers with great pillared double verandas extending around the entire house. This place, with all its roominess and beauty, is now closed while its owner makes her home in two or three bare rooms at the top of a city apartment house. Tell me if this is no wrong: That a woman of refinement and cultivation who has shown herself the friend of the Christian religion and of its teachers, should have been dispossessed of her rightful position and property by the greedy hands of white people calling themselves Christians, and be hounded through the world as though she were a criminal, for defending as best she could that which she believes to be her own? I think it is a wrong. I don't like that sort of Christianity and civilization and progress myself.

We also saw a photograph of the former queen's official residence in Honolulu, from which she is now disbarred, of course. It is a stately building with the picturesque city rising about it and the mountains in the distance. While the Queen was imprisoned she was not allowed the use of pen and ink, but was supplied with pencil and paper. She occupied her time in composing music. At our request she kindly took up her instrument, the autoharp, and sang for us a couple of songs. One of them was composed while she was a prisoner, and is entitled,

LILIUOKALANI'S PRAYER.

Oh Lord, thy loving mercy
Is high as the heaven;
It tells us of thy truth,
And 'tis filled with holiness. Amen.

Whilst humbly meditating,
Within these walls imprisoned,
Thou art my light, my haven,
Thy glory my support.

Oh look not on their failing,
Nor on the sins of men,
Forgive with loving kindness,
That we might be made pure.

For thy grace I beseech thee,
Bring us 'neath thy protection,
And peace will be our portion,
Now and forever more. Amen.

Captain Palmer stated the poetry of Hawaii is not rhyme, and that in this respect their poets are all Walt Whitmans.

The Queen has a rich, low-pitched contralto voice, the style of a voice fitted for love songs. One could fancy her seated on the broad veranda of her island home chanting in the moonlight the song she next gave us:

I have seen and watched thy loveliness,
Thou sweet rose of Maunawili,
And 'tis there the birds oft love to dwell
And sip the honey from thy lips.

Farewell to thee, thou charming one,
Who dwells in shaded bowers.
A fond embrace ere I depart,
Until we meet again.

A book of her songs has been bound and sent to Queen Victoria as Liliuokalani's jubilee gift.

It was at this juncture that I managed myself to get into trouble, in an unexpected way, too, as trouble generally comes. A friend of Liliuokalani came in and took a seat before an open window and said: "Oh, there's a draft here, and I can't sit in the draft." The queen immediately ordered the window closed, and her secretary sprang to do the bidding. The friend protested that she did not wish to deprive Liliuokalani of the air. "But I want it closed," she said, "I have the rheumatism."

And here was where your scribe involved herself by saying, "You will have to become a Christian Scientist and then you will not be affected by any kind of a draft, unless possibly a draft on New York." She looked at me squarely and asked, "What do the Christian Scientists believe?"

That was a stumper, and after I had floundered around until she felt sorry for me she turned with an amused smile and said, "Mr. Palmer what do the Christian Scientists believe?"

"Your majesty, I doubt if they know themselves," was his diplomatic reply.

The ex-Queen uses a typewriter. She has a new Hammond which was brought into the room for her friend to examine. It seemed very intricate and caused the friend to exclaim, "How did you ever learn to write on it?" This gave Captain Palmer an opportunity to say, "She had no trouble. She wrote several lines the first time she tried it that I couldn't read."

A great deal is said about Liliuokalani's self-seeking. As an example of the fact that she will not willingly place herself in any position where she will cause others annoyance, or seek to secure favors that might be asked by anyone, much as some of her enemies would like to see her do it, she drove out to Arlington on Decoration Day. Her carriage was stopped at the entrance as all carriages were stopped unless a special permit for admission had been granted. When the official had been informed who was the occupant of the carriage, the ex-Queen was immediately put under the care of an officer and given every attention. She was urged to take a seat upon the platform with the orator of the day and other distinguished guests. This she refused to do, but asked that her carriage might be allowed to stand at the rear of the auditorium where she could hear the speaker without leaving her seat. This request was courteously granted. My impression of Liliuokalani was that she is a quiet, refined, cultivated and gentle woman. She has a keen sense of humor, enjoys a joke and is easily amused. She was tired and she appeared so. Yet she patiently endeavored to make our call a pleasant one. She is no longer a young woman. Her gray hair, as she turned her head from me to speak to her friend, looked very pretty and is her only beautiful endowment.

Everyone is wise who keeps a still tongue even when his affairs are of no importance to anyone but himself. The ex-Queen has shown herself wise in that she has not made a single indiscreet remark during her stay in this country. There are plenty of people who are constantly on the watch to catch her making unwise or indiscreet utterances.

On the scaffold Madame Roland cried, "O Liberty, how many crimes are committed in thy name!" No one in his senses believes for one moment that had there been no question of gain for those who were instrumental in the overthrow of Queen Liliuokalani, there would have been any sentimental references to liberty or any sympathy wasted on the subjects of the Queen, over whose wrongs they waxed so eloquent.
